held in Eastern cities. The alarm service in Memphis has been defective in many ways, the principal evil being that it was extremely difficult to remedy any break that might occur, because there were no instruments by which the break might be located. On this account there was a danger that signals sent in from the boxes might never reach the enginehouses, and it was often the case that the whole city was disconnected while the firemen were looking for a break. The city was covered by but one circuit, and when it was broken there was no way of telling whether the trouble lay in NOETH OR SOUTH
